Not illustrated. 1861 Excerpt: ...he made altogether too little reparation for the property of God which he had from many holy places. In the same year came the strong wind on Thomas' mass-night (Dec. 21st), and everywhere did much harm; also was Rhys, the Welsh king's brother, slain. declared an outlaw, and all the Frenchmen, because they had chiefly made the discord between earl Godwine#and the king. And bishop Stigand succeeded to the archbishopric of Canterbury; and at this same time Arnwi, abbot of Peterborough, left the abbacy in sound health, and gave it to Leofric, a monk, by leave of the king and of the monks; and abbot Arnwi lived afterwards eight winters. And the abbot Leofric then so enriched the monastery that it was called the golden borough; it then waxed greatly in land, and in gold, and in silver. An. M.lii.--and so went to Wight, and took there all the ships which might be of any value, and hostages, and so turned eastward. And Harold with nine ships was arrived at Porlock, and there slew many people, and took cattle, and men, and property, and went eastward to his father; and they both went to Komney, to Hythe, to Folkestone, to Dover, to Sandwich; and ever took all the ships that they found, which might be of any value, and hostages as they went, and then betook themselves to London, etc.b 1 In the text 'eft gewyrpte,' translation is consequently conjecwhich I do not understand; my tural. It may be a nautical term. An. m.liii. In this year the king was in Winchester, at Easter (April 11th), and earl Godwine with him, and Harold 322. his son, and Tostig. Then on the second Easter-day he was sitting with the king at refection, when he snddenly sank down by the footstool, deprived of speech and of all his power; and he was then removed into the king's chamber; and it was th...
